COURSE DESCRIPTION

Advanced Placement English Language and Composition is a college-level course in composition and critical reading. This course is designed for students who already understand and use standard English grammar and composition. This course involves intensive study of and use of rhetorical modes in writing. Extensive composition and discussion require students to demonstrate sensitivity to the language and the structure of a piece of writing as well as to refine their own power and precision in organizing and expressing thoughts.

The course is divided into eight units: Autobiography, Letters, Persuasion and Argumentation, Critical Review, Scientific Writing, Political Discourse, Synthesis and Description. These units represent many of the types of writing that students may explore in preparation for the Advanced Placement (AP) test. Each unit examines writing as an organic process, puts a great emphasis on revision, and requires that students write in each of the genres and rhetorical modes. Also, each unit contains challenging reading selections where students look to authors as a model, where they will analyze and dissect the text looking for features from each unit. All pieces of a student's writing are stored in a Works in Progress folder from which each student selects pieces of writing for his or her writing portfolio. The contents of the portfolio illustrate how each student has grown and improved as a writer throughout the year.

Students will take two Standards of Learning Tests for English: Writing and Reading/Literature and Research or a substitute test approved by the State Board of Education. Specific dates for the spring or summer SOL test will be announced by the school. Students will also have the option to take the College Board Advanced Placement Language and Composition test offered in May. Details for this test will be released by the school at a later date.
